The unweaving of the Confederate monument in Arlington on Thursday is an event looked forward to with the liveliest interest in Richmond, in Virginia and throughout the South. This monument is the Capital of the country is erected to the enlisted men, the soldiers of the whole Confederate army. These were the men who made their generals and their country immortal.

The memorial will be the tribute of countless thousands—men, women and children—who revere and whose descendants will be taught to revere the memory of the men and women who glorified the South by the sacrifices they made in 1861-5.

Mr. Moses Ezekiel, the sculptor, said that he knew of no monument in Europe that is entirely of bronze and standing on a granite curbing as this one is, except the statue of Frederick the Great in Berlin.

On the occasion of the unweaving the chairman of the Arlington Confederate Monument Association will present the monument to the president-general of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, who will then present it to the President of the United States.

YE MODE PARISIAN IN ITS VARIETY

Useful Suits in Black or Blue Serge, Gabardine and a Rib—Blouse in Fine Crepe.

Paris, May 13.—Here is another charming little collection of new models with all sorts of new ideas and pretty fantasies. The tailor-mades may be described as cocasses. There is one in fine navy blue serge which has a skirt with an almost flat back, and from the sides two foot-deep flounces, one of serge, one of black taffeta moire, which make a sort of tunic in front and give a wing effect to the sides.

Both flounces are slit in front, to be fastened together by a taffeta lacing ending in tassels.

The coat is an attractive little garment of short, sack-like cut.

Black and Blue. It is trimmed with pockets of bright embroidery and a high turned-back collar of bright striped, corded silk in blues, greens, golds and reds, all so well blended that they merely recall bright and not gaudy.

Another model is a capricious, worn a corsage partly of cream net and partly of black taffeta moire, like the flounce on the skirt, and there was a coat of gas, not gold, like that on the coat. Another model was in a vivid blue green, with jet buttons, a black taffeta waistcoat, very soft and blousy, with a green cloth cape, which could either hang over a capricious, drawn together like a coat. Under it was a white crepon blouse, with long, frilled bishop's sleeves, trimmed very lightly with green taffeta. The skirt had a deep shaped dounce over a most straight foundation. Zimmermann is using a good deal of cloth, fine serge, gabardine and a ribbed cloth to which there seems no name.

The Crepe Blouse. For blouses she is using crepe Georgette, a fine material like mousseline de soie, only stronger. Most of her waists are short and sack-like, with collars of magnificent embroidery—one might almost call them boleros. Taffeta is the favorite material for afternoon gowns, and there are some most beautiful little coats (cocoasses, as she calls them) to wear with them. They are of no particular shape, and they are slit here, there and everywhere; they fall in folds, and follow the lines of the corsage with a sanity one would not expect from them when held in the hand.

Brown and Cream. There was a spotted brown taffeta, with a creamy tulle corsage, which had one of these little garments, and there was an amber taffeta, trimmed with black to match, which also had one. The bustle was not in evidence, but bunched up draperies were, and, although the skirt prevailed in moderation, there were some models which were a little Zouave skirt—that is to say, they were caught under at the feet and allowed to balloon a little.

Colorful Evening Rigs. The evening dresses were noticeable for their lovely colors. There was a tango taffeta—flame color expressed in for the uninitiated—which was caught up into a front, sideways drape by huge taffeta roses. The corsage, decollete of course, was of cream, net with a hint of embroidery in the color of the gown. Another tango-colored dress had a net tunic embroidered in black, which fell in two tiers, leaving the sides of the skirt uncovered. A most stately dress, eminently fitted to appear at court, was in shaded rose brocade, with a tulle only on one side of the corsage, and in jet and crystal, the same net being used for the corsage, which was cut square.

THOSE NEW CAPES

One of those jolly Cavalier cloaks in black cloth lined with white satin, with a great Napoleon collar of black velvet, is the height of chic. A more perfectly thought-out scheme one could not wish to find. No high-trained perception was required to foresee the instant success that would be obtained by the long, free-flowing cloaks. These really are the epitomes of elegance, and at present the prices asked keep them above the populace.

In any case they must cost sums that would not be justified in the sight of those only moderately concerned; for there is a considerable amount of stuff in them. Furthermore, attractive as these great capes are, they may only be a passing mode, although the amount of diversity brought to bear upon them is extraordinary.

For really practical service a model that closely follows the lines of an overcoat is capital. This is one navy serge with a half-lining and long roll collar facing of some vivid-toned, self-colored satin, or perhaps a tartan silk, would not date so soon as one of the more extravagantly trusted circular affairs, with picturesque but frequently amazing collars. One of these last, built of black corded silk lined with white satin, would serve. About the shoulders the top is thrown back by a deep, all-around collar—really, almost, this might be described as a short cape—and from beneath heavy twisted silk cord tassels that are solely responsible for keeping the wrap on the figure at all.

Wonders of the World. Teacher—"What are seven wonders of the world, Johnny?" Johnny—"Seven? Are you sure there are only seven? It takes nine to make a full team, you know."

Pegging Down Roses. Pegging down is an interesting form of training roses and a system that is valuable for special effects. The first consideration in pegging is vigorous growth. Prune hard the first year, but in the two following years very little will be necessary, as all the growth is pegged down to secure an even effect. As soon as enough young growth has been made to take the place of that which has flowered the latter must be cut away and the young shoot pegged down in its place. A well-furnished bed of pegged-down roses should have its surface covered all over with shoots about nine inches apart. Until there is growth enough to cover the surface the old wood must be allowed to remain for another year, encouraging the blooming by pruning in the laterals to a spur with two or three buds. The pegs are cut from twigs, cut so the crotch will hold the rose branch to the ground.

FLETCHER IS SLATED FOR BADGER'S PLACE

In Greater Favor Than Other Candidates for Highest of All Sea Duty.

Washington, May 31.—It has been practically decided that Rear Admiral Frank E. Fletcher, commander of the First Division of the Atlantic Fleet, who was in charge of the American forces which seized Vera Cruz, will be commander-in-chief of the Atlantic Fleet on July 1, when the tour of Rear Admiral Charles J. Hager, now commander-in-chief, comes to an end.

There are other candidates for this highest of all sea duty, the foremost of whom are Rear Admiral Cameron McRae Winslow, who now commands the special service squadron, which has been formed for duty in Mexican waters, and Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, aid for operations to the Secretary of the Navy and a member of the general board, but neither stands so greatly in favor as Rear Admiral Fletcher.

There is no doubt that Rear Admiral Fletcher wants the place, and if he wants it he can get it. For months the Secretary of the Navy has lost no opportunity of singling Rear Admiral Fletcher's praises. Time and again he has said, when questions of moment in the navy were being left entirely in the hands of Rear Admiral Fletcher, for whom the Navy Department had the highest admiration and in whom it placed the greatest trust.

The efficiency shown by Rear Admiral Fletcher in the taking of Vera Cruz impressed the President and the Secretary of the Navy. The successful task was done speedily and well. Naval officers also recognize that Fletcher did a good job, and would have probably done a still better one, from the point of view of lives lost, if he had had full authority from the beginning to take all of Vera Cruz instead of only the custom-house. They think that if he had been at liberty to hang over the town when landing he would have averted a panic, during which the American sailors and marines could have occupied the whole city with less loss of life than actually took place.

ANNUAL MEETING CLOSED. [Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Harrisonburg, Va., May 31.—After a session of four days, the Virginia Classis of the Reformed Church closed its annual meeting here this morning. The classis will meet next year at Newport, Augusta County.

The classis went on record favoring $500 as the minimum salary for ministers. This proposition, originating with the Potomac Synod, of which the Virginia Classis is a part. The plan is that the classis will refuse to continue a call where the salary is less than $500, and where the charge cannot pay that amount, the difference will be made up by the synod.

President Benchoff, of Massachusetts Academy, Woodstock, reported the enrollment of 105, the largest in the history of the school. Students were enrolled from twelve States, Cuba, Hawaii and Korea. There were seven in the graduating class last week.

FIRST TEST ON TUESDAY OF NEW PRIMARY LAW

Nomination of Candidates for Federal and State Offices in Florida Will Take Place.

Jacksonville, Fla., May 31.—Nomination of candidates for Federal and State offices will take place on Tuesday under Florida's new primary law. It is the intention of the law that all political parties nominate candidates at the primary, but this year only Democratic candidates qualified. Nomination on the Democratic ticket is equivalent to election in Florida.

Under the new law, voters cast ballots for first and second choices, insuring a nomination in the first primary, thus making a second primary unnecessary, as was the case under the old system, when no candidate received a majority vote.

Besides one candidate for United States Senator and national Representatives from the four congressional districts of the State, a number of State officials, of the State Legislature and various county officers, will be nominated.

Duncan U. Fletcher, candidate for re-nomination as United States Senator, is opposed by John N. C. Stockton. Senator Fletcher's term expires March 3, 1915.

Representative Stephen M. Sparkman, chairman of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, is opposed for re-nomination in the First District by A. J. Ankle and J. Fred de Berry.

Representative Frank Clark is opposed by John Denton for re-nomination in the Second District.

Representative Emmett Wilson is opposed for re-nomination in the Third District by John Stokes.

Claude L'Engle, at present Representative State at large, is opposed for re-nomination in the newly-created Fourth District by St. Elmo W. Acosta, W. H. Malone, W. J. Sears and Albert Williamson.
